Honey West Presents

HOTTEST FEMALE KILLERS

It's that time of year again - Halloween! We thought we would put together the finest killers - to date, that is. I'm sure there are more to come.

#8 Casey Anthony

The (hot) mother of Caylee Marie Anthony, a toddler that disappeared in June 2008 and whose remains were later discovered. Prosecutors alleged that Anthony was involved in the slaying of her 2-year-old daughter and pointed to several instances of lying to the police and photos of Casey Anthony partying in the months that her daughter was missing.

Despite overwhelming evidence, a jury found Casey Anthony not guilty.

#6 Molly Jane Roe

Police believe that Molly Jane Roe, 24, ruthlessly and fatally assaulted her boyfriend's 17-month-old baby girl, Maleeya Marie Murley, in western Tennessee. In 2013, Roe pleaded guilty.

#5 Jade Ransom

Jade Ransom, now 24, is accused of slaying Jesus Dimas Rodriguez Marques, 23, of Dover, NJ in 2008. Ransom told police Marques was accosting her on the street. But authorities say evidence and witness accounts contradict her. Apparently, she told a fellow inmate (who then told the authorities) that she was not actually assaulted and the attack was a random slaying for a Bloods gang initiation.

#7 Amber Hilberling

She was charged in the second-degree for pushing her husband out of their apartment at the University Club tower in Tulsa, OK. Joshua Hiberling perished after falling from the 25th-floor window to the roof of a parking garage 17 floors below. Amber was sentenced to 25 years.

#4 Mechele Linehan

Linehan was a 23-year-old dancer at the Great Alaskan Bush Company when her then-fiance Kent Leppink was found slain in a wooded area near Hope in 1996. She had left Alaska, moved to Washington, married and started a family when she was indicted for conspiring to kill Leppink in 2006.

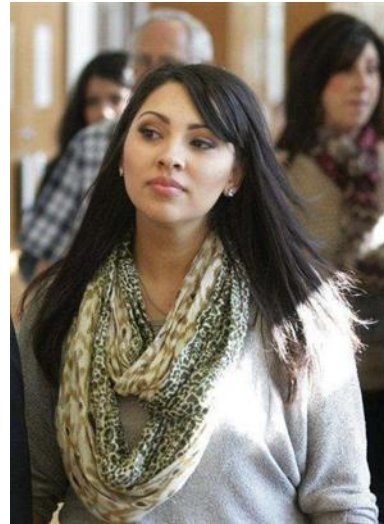

Prosecutors said she manipulated John Carlin III, a former lover, into offing Leppink. Both men thought they were engaged to Linehan, according to prosecutors' version of events. In 2007, a jury found her guilty. Carlin was convicted in a separate trial and sentenced to 99 years. He was later slain in prison. In 2010, an appeals court tossed out the conviction against Linehan.

#3 Amanda Knox

American student Amanda Knox was charged after British college student Meredith Kercher was found slain in November 2007, her throat slashed in an Italian villa she shared with Knox. Knox, her then-boyfriend Raffaele Sollecito and a drifter named Rudy Guede were tried as well. The victim, Meredith Kercher was a college-aged student who was studying in Italy and who allegedly refused to take part in group intercourse with Amanda Knox and two Italian guys that she brought back to their apartment. Knox was acquitted in 2010, but the Italian Supreme Court judges re-opened the case in 2013.

#2 Megan Martzen

Megan Martzen, 19, was babysitting a toddler in Fresno, CA when the baby suffered what was described as trauma to the head and abdomen that resulted in the baby's demise. After being under investigation for more than a year, police took Martzen into custody.

#1 Jodi Arias

Jodi Arias was charged in the first-degree for slaying her ex-boyfriend, salesman Travis Alexander. He sustained multiple wounds, a slit throat, and a shot to the head. At trial, she testified that the act was committed in self-defense.

STRANGE NEWS

Terrifying Moment Two People Fall From Swing On The Edge Of 6,000-Foot Cliff

Their fall came when a cable allegedly snapped on the swinging chair above the Sulak Canyon in Dagestan.

Luckily for them, the pair landed on a narrow decking platform under the edge of the cliff and their lives were saved.

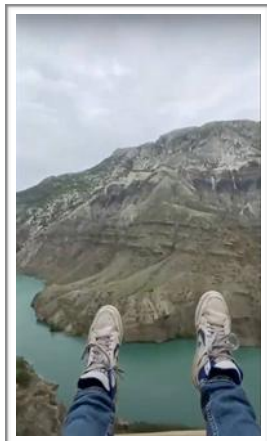

They sustained no more than cuts and bruises, but police are investigating safety failings at this location near Zubutli village and others nearby where the canyon is more than one mile deep.

A source told Komsomolskaya Pravda: "The girls got scared and sustained scratches, but neither of them suffered serious injuries.

"It is chilling to imagine what could have happened if they slipped when the swings were at a maximum height."

The local Kazbekovsky council is expected to demand such precipice swings be removed, said reports.

The Sulak gorge is deeper than the Grand Canyon in the US, and described as the deepest canyon in Europe.

New Halloween Film Is So Scary Viewers Are Reportedly Wetting Themselves In Cinemas

'Tis the season to not be able to go the toilet at night without turning on every light in the house. But if you're not quite yet feeling uncomfortably anxious enough in your own home, then maybe you should go and see Halloween.

The horror is so scary that people are claiming they are actually pissing their pants - now that sounds too good an opportunity to turn down right?

The film enjoyed a record-breaking opening weekend in the US, grossing $77.5 million (£59.2m) in the box office over the first three days since its release, making it the most successful film in the Halloween franchise.

But better still, it seems these viewers got value for money, with cinema-goers taken to social media in their droves to revel in how very frightened they were.

Numerous people on Twitter claimed they nearly/actually pissed themselves.

One person said: "Halloween was soooooo good, bitch i almost pissed myself."

Another said: "We just saw the new halloween and i nearly pissed myself like four times that shit was spooky."

And another: "I deadass watched Halloween and pissed myself."

Rave reviews indeed.

Fear not, symptoms of watching this film extend way beyond simple inter-pant urination.

JUANA BARRAZA

Her story

Juana Barraza (born 27 December 1957) is a Mexican serial killer and former professional wrestler dubbed La Mataviejitas (Sp. "The Old Lady Killer") sentenced to 759 years in prison for killing between 42 and 48 elderly women.

The first murder attributed to Mataviejitas has been dated variously to the late 1990s and to a specific killing on 17 November 2003. The authorities and the press have given various estimates as to the total number of her victims, with estimates ranging from 42 to 48 deaths.

All of Barraza's victims were women aged 60 or over, many of whom lived alone. Barraza bludgeoned or strangled them before robbing them.

Bernardo Bátiz, the chief prosecutor in Mexico City, initially profiled the killer as having "a brilliant mind, [being] quite clever and careful," and suggested that the killer probably struck after gaining the trust of the intended victim.

Investigating officers suspected that the killer posed as a government official, offering victims the chance to sign up for welfare programs.

The search for Barraza was complicated by conflicting evidence. At one point, the police hypothesized that two killers might be involved.

An odd coincidence also distracted the investigation: at least three of Barraza's victims owned a print of an eighteenth-century painting by French artist Jean-Baptiste Greuze, Boy in A Red Waistcoat.

The authorities believed that Juana Barraza was a psychopath who felt no remorse. Furthermore, Barraza associated her elderly victims with her mother and believed that she was helping society by killing them. In order to gain the trust of her victims, Barraza posed as a government official who worked in social welfare. Because of this, Barraza is placed in the "care giving" category of female killers.

The trauma of Barraza's childhood abuse was a factor in her murders.

Barraza was tried in the spring of 2008, the prosecution alleging she had been responsible for as many as 40 deaths. She admitted to one murder, that of Alfaro, and told the police her motive was lingering resentment regarding her own mother's treatment of her. On 31 March, she was found guilty on 16 charges of murder and aggravated burglary, including 11 separate counts of murder. She was sentenced to 759 years in prison.

Since sentences imposed in Mexican courts are generally served concurrently, but the maximum sentence under Mexican law is 60 years, she will most likely serve the full sentence in prison.

In September 2015, Barraza was highlighted in the Investigation Discovery series Deadly Women, in an episode titled "Payback".

"Machismo", the nineteenth episode of the first season of Criminal Minds is partly based on Barraza.

"Bound", the third-to-last episode of the fifth season of Law & Order: Special Victims Unit is also partly based on Barraza.

A full-body portrait of a young woman with long, wavy, reddish-brown hair and bangs. She has freckles and is looking directly at the camera with a neutral expression. She is wearing a black fishnet crop top with a wide black band across the chest and another across the waist. She has a small hoop nose ring and a thin gold chain necklace with a small pendant. There are tattoos on her upper arms: a planet-like design on her right shoulder and a more abstract design on her left shoulder. Her right hand is resting on her hip. The background is a plain, light-colored wall.

SCARY STORIES

'This new old house' by BatoutofHell821

We bought an old house, my boyfriend and I. He's in charge of the "new" construction – converting the kitchen in to the master bedroom for instance, while I'm on wallpaper removal duty. The previous owner papered EVERY wall and CEILING! Removing it is brutal, but oddly satisfying.

The best feeling is getting a long peel, similar to your skin when you're peeling from a sunburn. I don't know about you but I kinda make a game of peeling, on the hunt for the longest piece before it rips. Under a corner section of paper in every room is a person's name and a date.

Curiosity got the best of me one night when I Googled one of the names and discovered the person was actually a missing person, the missing date matching the date under the wallpaper! The next day, I made a list of all the names and dates. Sure enough each name was for a missing person with dates to match.

We notified the police who naturally sent out the crime scene team. I overheard one tech say "yup, it's human." Human? What's human? "Ma'am, where is the material you removed from the walls already? This isn't wallpaper you were removing."

'I hate it when my brother Charlie has to go away' by horrorinpureform

I hate it when my brother Charlie has to go away. My parents constantly try to explain to me how sick he is. That I am lucky for having a brain where all the chemicals flow properly to their destinations like undammed rivers.

When I complain about how bored I am without a little brother to play with, they try to make me feel bad by pointing out that his boredom likely far surpasses mine, considering his confine to a dark room in an institution. I always beg for them to give him one last chance.

Of course, they did at first. Charlie has been back home several times, each shorter in duration than the last. Every time without fail, it all starts again. The neighbourhood cats with gouged out eyes showing up in his toy chest, my dad's razors found dropped on the baby slide in the park across the street, mom's vitamins replaced by bits of dishwasher tablets.

My parents are hesitant now, using "last chances" sparingly. They say his disorder makes him charming, makes it easy for him to fake normalcy, and to trick the doctors who care for him into thinking he is ready for rehabilitation.

That I will just have to put up with my boredom if it means staying safe from him. I hate it when Charlie has to go away.

It makes me have to pretend to be good until he is back.

'Guardians' by DarkAlliGator

He awoke to the huge, insect like creatures looming over his bed and screamed his lungs out. They hastily left the room and he stayed up all night, shaking and wondering if it had been a dream.

The next morning, there was a tap on the door. Gathering his courage, he opened it to see one of them gently place a plate filled with fried breakfast on the floor, then retreat to a safe distance. Bewildered, he accepted the gift. The creatures chattered excitedly. This happened every day for weeks. At first he was worried they were fattening him up, but after a particularly greasy breakfast left him clutching his chest from heartburn, they were replaced with fresh fruit. As well as cooking, they poured hot steamy baths for him and even tucked him in when he went to bed. It was bizarre.

One night, he awoke to gunshots and screaming. He raced downstairs to find a decapitated burglar being devoured by the insects. He was sickened, but disposed of the remains as best he could. He knew they had just been protecting him. One morning the creatures wouldn't let him leave his room. He lay down, confused but trusting as they ushered him back into bed. Whatever their motives, they weren't going to hurt him. Hours later a burning pain spread throughout his body. It felt like his stomach was filled with razor wire.

The insects chattered as he spasmed and moaned. It was only when he felt a terrible squirming feeling beneath his skin that he realized the insects hadn't been protecting him.

They had been protecting their young.

'Seeing Red (The First Day of School)' by Zenryhao

Everyone loves the first day of school, right? New year, new classes, new friends. It's a day full of potential and hope, before all the dreary depressions of reality show up to ruin all the fun. I like the first day of school for a different reason, though. You see, I have a sort of power. When I look at people, I can...sense a sort of aura around them. A colored outline based on how long that person has to live.

Most everyone I meet around my age is surrounded by a solid green hue, which means they have plenty of time left. A fair amount of them have a yellow-orangish tinge to their auras, which tends to mean a car crash or some other tragedy. Anything that takes people "before their time" as they say. The real fun is when the auras venture into the red end of the spectrum, though. Every now and again I'll see someone who's basically a walking stoplight. Those are the ones who get murdered or kill themselves. It's such a rush to see them and know their time is numbered. With that in mind, I always get to class very early so I can scout out my classmates' fates. The first kid who walked in was basically radiating red. I chuckled to myself. Too damn bad, bro. But as people kept walking in, they all had the same intense glow. I finally caught a glimpse of my rose-tinted reflection in the window, but I was too stunned to move.

Our professor stepped in and locked the door, his aura a sickening shade of green.

'They got the definition wrong' by Lloiu

It has been said that the definition of insanity is "doing the same thing over and over and expecting different results". I understand the sentiment behind the saying, but it's wrong. I entered the building on a bet.

I was strapped for cash and didn't buy into the old legends of the hotel to begin with, so fifty bucks was more than enough to get me do it. It was simple. Just reach the top floor, the 45th floor, shine my flashlight from a window. The hotel was old and broken, including the elevator, so that meant hiking up the stairs. So up the stairs I went.

As I reached each platform, I noted the old brass plaques displaying the floor numbers. 15, 16, 17, 18. I felt a little tired as I crept higher, but so far, no ghosts, no cannibals, no demons. Piece of cake. I can't tell you how happy I was as I entered that last stretch of numbers. I joyfully counted them aloud at each platform. 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 44. I stopped and looked back down the stairs. I must have miscounted, so I continued up. 44. One more flight. 44. And then down ten flights. 44. Fifteen flights. 44. And so it's been for as long as I can remember.

So really, insanity isn't doing something repeatedly and expecting different results. It's knowing that the results will never ever change; that each door leads to the same staircase, to the same number. It's realizing you no longer fall asleep. It's not knowing whether you've been running for days or weeks or years.

It's when the sobbing slowly turns into laughter.

'My Daughter Learned to Count' by RealScience87

My daughter woke me around 11:50 last night. My wife and I had picked her up from her friend Sally's birthday party, brought her home, and put her to bed. My wife went into the bedroom to read while I fell asleep watching the Braves game. "Daddy," she whispered, tugging my shirt sleeve. "Guess how old I'm going to be next month." "I don't know, beauty," I said as I slipped on my glasses. "How old?" She smiled and held up four fingers. It is 7:30 now. My wife and I have been up with her for almost 8 hours. She still refuses to tell us where she got them.

'Timekeeper' by gridster2

He had been given the watch on his tenth birthday. It was an ordinary grey plastic wristwatch in every respect except for the fact that it was counting down. "That is all of the time you have left in the world, son. Use it wisely." And indeed he did.

As the watch ticked away, the boy, now a man, lived life to the fullest. He climbed mountains and swam oceans. He talked and laughed and lived and loved. The man was never afraid, for he knew exactly how much time he had left.

Eventually, the watch began its final countdown.

The old man stood looking over everything he had done, everything he had built. 5. He shook hands with his old business partner, the man who had long been his friend and confidant. 4. His dog came and licked his hand, earning a pat on the head for its companionship. 3. He hugged his son, knowing that he had been a good father. 2. He kissed his wife on the forehead one last time. 1. The old man smiled and closed his eyes.

Then, nothing happened. The watch beeped once and turned off. The man stood standing there, very much alive. You would think that in that moment he would have been overjoyed.

Instead, for the first time in his life, the man was scared.

'There's no Reason to be Afraid' by whoever fights monster

When my sister Betsy and I were kids, our family lived for awhile in a charming old farmhouse. We loved exploring its dusty corners and climbing the apple tree in the backyard. But our favorite thing was the ghost.

We called her Mother, because she seemed so kind and nurturing. Some mornings Betsy and I would wake up, and on each of our nightstands, we'd find a cup that hadn't been there the night before.

Mother had left them there, worried that we'd get thirsty during the night. She just wanted to take care of us. Among the house's original furnishings was an antique wooden chair, which we kept against the back wall of the living room. Whenever we were preoccupied, watching TV or playing a game, Mother would inch that chair forward, across the room, toward us.

Sometimes she'd manage to move it all the way to the center of the room. We always felt sad putting it back against the wall. Mother just wanted to be near us. Years later, long after we'd moved out, I found an old newspaper article about the farmhouse's original occupant, a widow. She'd murdered her two children by giving them each a cup of poisoned milk before bed.

Then she'd hanged herself.

The article included a photo of the farmhouse's living room, with a woman's body hanging from a beam.

Beneath her, knocked over, was that old wooden chair, placed exactly in the center of the room.

Sexual Advice

WITH COVID-19 FORGING MANY OF US INDOORS, IT'S TIME TO REDEFINE SOLO SEX

With the now-ubiquitous New York City Health Department guidelines on sex and coronavirus circulating the interwebs and all talk of orgies and group sex being subsequently taken off the table, what are pleasure-seekers to do with our free time? But really, good on the NYC Health Department for compiling this list of factors to watch out for regarding transmission of the virus. Even the most vanilla of activities such as kissing can be a mode of passing along COVID-19. I've seen the memes about the surge of babies that will be born from this pandemic (are we calling them coronials?), but where are the memes about the Popeye arm from all the masturbation? In fact, masturbation was mentioned as the top sex activity one can engage in safely. And before people come at me about masturbation not being "real sex," you're wrong. It literally has it in its name: solo sex. And it's immune-boosting to boot, so win-win. Since we all have the time now, here are some fun ways to get off when you're in isolation.

Slow it down

While there's something to be said about the novelty of quickies, we want to shift away from the fast-and-furious model to one of slow and steady. Slow down your sex play. Savor the moment and relish all the feelings and sensations you're bringing about in your body. Many distractions and obligations have been removed, so why not treat masturbation as the main course?

Hotline Bling

Don't lament a partner who used to call you on your cell phone. Pick up that phone and exercise your aural sex muscles. This is when you stimulate a partner from afar with just your voice. This can be a less confronting option than full-on video chat (which is up next!), but it's just as sexy. Since you can't see each other, you really have to paint a picture in your partner's mind about what you're doing to yourself. Don't leave out the senses. How does your body feel? What do you taste like? Can you hear their moans? This is also great advice for sexting, which I'm sure will reach new heights this month!

Video Chat

This is a step up from phone sex. Pull in that same energy from above and couple it with the bonus of being able to see your partner. Consider your surroundings. Although it's admirable that you support a local business by ordering take-out, we don't want to see those cartons in the background. Soft, indirect light is flattering; overhead fluorescent is not. And if it feels weird in the beginning, that's okay! You're trying something new. Feel free to laugh, and roll with it.

Pervertables

This is one of my favorite things to do! Most of us have been told to stay home except for essential purchases, such as gas for the car or a carton of eggs from the grocery store, but I don't know if that applies to hitting up your local sex shop and grabbing a sex toy. This is where your creativity gets to shine! Look around your house and see which vanilla object you can use for sex. Maybe you're into nipple stimulation? Find some clothespins from the laundry room, but be sure to test the pinch level first! Does your partner want to see you spanked? Grab that silicone spatula from the kitchen drawer. Always exercise caution and good judgment when implementing pervertables. The internet has lots of suggestions for you. And FYI, the candles on your mantel are not appropriate for wax play.

Virtual Group Sex

If the "no group sex" recommendation is really bumming you out, consider moving your party to digital. From my understanding, you can FaceTime with up to 32 people! This may take some planning, but it could be a memorable and unique experience if you get the right group together.

Steamy Erotica

This can get very steamy very quickly. You can find written narratives about practically anything on the internet. Literotica.com has thousands of stories, written and audio, for you to enjoy. Bonus points if you and your partner take turns reading erotica to each other. Our writer Honey West writes some great stuff.
